The year is 2004. Patrick finished playing for Ric Boals and The Soals (1997-2000) and returned to Columbus, he was playing 6 nights a week in no time, by joining Kathy Wolfe and Wolfhound and then starting the first incarnation of the celebrated Patrick McLaughlin Band (a.k.a. The PMB). With the husky, wailing vocals of Deb Landolt, Keith Blair on keyboards, Leon Robinson on drums and the late Jeffrey Cooper on bass, the PMB was truly a blues force to be reckoned with. During their run (from 2001 to 2006), they represented Ohio twice at the International Blues Challenge and a finalist in 2004. All the while, Patrick was keeping in touch with his professional roots, hosting numerous weekly blues jams around Columbus including the Dolphin Lounge and The Blues Station.

The 2004 album was crafted during this time, it was not released. Bass player Jeffrey Cooper was diagnosed with cancer and passed on at 24 years old. The blow to Patrick and everyone in the band was devastating. The album sat in the vault, and each band member went their separate ways. Patrick did not play or have a band for several years, 2009 began the next group and subsequent album.

Jeffrey's music should out there be for everyone to hear. With all the unlicensed versions out there, this is the way the music was written and intended for people to enjoy. The original music has been continuously played on local station 90.5 WCBE, and has been the only place it is
