Anton Bruckner - Symphony No.0 (Davies) [2010]

1 Allegro 2 Andante 3 Scherzo: Presto — Trio: Langsamer und ruhiger 4 Finale: Moderato — Allegro vivace Brucknerorchester Linz Colin Davies - conductor

This Symphony in D minor (WAB 100) composed by Anton Bruckner was not assigned a number by its composer, and has subsequently become known by the German designation Die Nullte (translated to The Zeroth or Number Nought in English).

Bruckner never gave this symphony a number, but long after its composition declared that it "gilt nicht" ("doesn't count") and on one copy of the score he put in an empty set symbol (\emptyset). This symbol was later interpreted as a numeral zero. According to the conductor Georg Tintner, this lack of confidence in the work arose from a question by the puzzled conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, Felix Otto Dessoff, who asked Bruckner, "Where is the main theme?"
