

Schubert - 'Rosamunde' & 'Der Tod und das Mädchen' Quartets (2012)

Written by bluesever

Wednesday, 30 April 2014 16:04 -

Schubert - 'Rosamunde' & 'Der Tod und das Mädchen' Quartets (2012)

String Quartet, D 804 'Rosamunde' 33:27 for two violins, viola, and cello in A minor - in a-Moll - en la mineur 1 I Allegro ma non troppo 13:00 2 II Andante 6:03 3 III Menuetto. Allegretto - Trio - Menuetto da capo 7:11 4 IV Allegro moderato 7:04

String Quartet, D 810 'Der Tod und das Mädchen' 40:15 (Death and the Maiden) for two violins, viola, and cello in D minor - in d-Moll - en ré mineur
5 I Allegro - Più mosso 14:58 6 II Andante con moto 13:00 7 III Scherzo. Allegro molto - Trio - Scherzo da capo 3:33 8 IV Presto - Prestissimo 8:33 73:55

Doric String Quartet Alex Redington violin Jonathan Stone violin Simon Tandree viola
John Myerscough cello Recorded in Potton Hall, Dunwich, Suffolk 10-12 April 2012

On its new release, the Doric String Quartet turns to the music of Franz Schubert. It is the Quartet's fifth release for Chandos, and the discography has gone from strength to strength. MusicWeb International said of the recent Korngold release (CHAN 10707): 'The Doric Quartet seem to have a Midas touch, and any repertoire they commit to disc comes out sparkling.' Their Schumann release (CHAN 10692) was 'Recording of the Month' in both Gramophone and BBC Music.

In March 1824, despite describing himself as 'the most unhappy and wretched creature in the world', Schubert completed not only the great Octet, but also the two String Quartets recorded here.

The String Quartet in D minor is considered the greatest of Schubert's late quartets, mainly on account of its raw emotional honesty, which reaches an almost unendurable pitch in the second movement, a set of variations based on Schubert's song Der Tod und das Mädchen. All four movements are driven by extensively repeated rhythmic figures, reminiscent of the musical style of Schubert's great idol, Beethoven.

Schubert - 'Rosamunde' & 'Der Tod und das Mädchen' Quartets (2012)

Written by bluesever

Wednesday, 30 April 2014 16:04 -

Full of Schubertian ambivalence, the String Quartet in A minor is a deeply intimate work. The opening, expressing brooding sadness, is played by the first violin over a restless accompaniment, subsequently interrupted by flurries of almost manic energy. In the second movement, Schubert 'borrowed' the main melody from the third Entr'acte of his incidental music to the play Rosamunde, Fürstin von Zypern (1823) by Wilhelmine von Chézy. ---chandos.net download: uploaded yandex 4shared mediafire solidfiles mega zalivalka filecloudio

anonfiles
oboom

back