Patrick Bruel is an iconic French actor and singer, who rose to popularity during the 1990s. Even though he aspired to become a professional football player as a teenager, he pursued singing and tried his luck at acting in films and theatre. After a couple of failed stints, he found success with his 1984 single 'Marre de cette nana-la' which made him a star overnight. Subsequently, he saw a roller-coaster journey recording various singles and albums, some of which were runaway hits while others went unnoticed. However, it was his 1989 studio album 'Alors Regarde' that transformed him from a mere successful singer to a megastar. Apart from appearing in films and theatre, he embarked a number of extensive tours, giving live performances, along with other notable singers, in France and other countries. He has acted in over 50 films, released four compilations of the best hit singles and recorded nine studio albums and eight live albums. In addition to having a successful singing and acting career, he is an ardent poker player and has consistently participated in various tournaments. He also won the World Series of Poker (WSOP) bracelet at the Limit Hold 'Em event in 1998.
