With half its songs drawn from Puta's Fever, Amerika Perdida isn't so much a bad release as simply an unnecessary one best left to completists. The disc essentially re-sequences Puta's Fever and replaces the rock songs sung in English with half-a-dozen others (from early singles or EPs?) that play up Mano Negra's international side. The new tracks reflect the band's sweeping range well enough, but without really adding any new dimension. "Indios de Barcelona" is the one noteworthy new song, but whatever Mano Negra thought they were gaining by shifting the focus of their early material this way is offset by the sacrifice of their rock dimension. ---Don Snowden, allmusic.com
