With this follow-up to their highly successful 2018 project, I Hear Bluegrass Calling Me, the North Carolina based band is already having huge success with the first single from the new album, “Grown Cold.” The song kicks off the album in great style, with banjo and fiddles, driving it along. The speed slows for “Take Me to the Mountains,” while “Country Lovin’ Son of a Gun” gets the adrenalin going once more. The fiddles and banjos sound great, and are backed by some, equally as good, bass notes. This is a blue grass album with all sorts of stories making up the content of each song. Imagine two lovers, with the male having to go to war. He writes letters, containing promises for when he returns. It all sounds good until, one day, he gets news that his beloved has died. You get the drift? That’s the “Ballad of Mary Ann.” The only songs that are unashamedly praise orientated are “I’m Gonna Wait on Jesus” and the closing “March Around Jericho.” Once again, the music is first class, and can’t help but enjoy each song. Although not a big bluegrass fan myself, I can highly recommend this release as both bright and refreshing. ---geoff83, neverfornothing.wordpress.com
