

Lenny Kravitz - It's time To Love Revolution (2008)

Written by bluesever

Friday, 25 December 2009 11:02 - Last Updated Monday, 18 June 2018 08:24

Lenny Kravitz - It's time To Love Revolution (2008)

01 - love revolution

02 - bring it on

03 - good morning

04 - love love love

05 - if you want it

06 - i'll be waiting

07 - will you marry me

08 - i love the rain

09 - a long and sad goodbye

10 - dancin' til dawn

11 - this moment is all there is

12 - a new door

13 - back in vietnam

14 - i want to go home

Darrett Adkins Cello Tawatha Agee Vocals (Background) Mike Block Cello David Bowlin MViolin Tony Breit Bass, Guitar (Bass) Kenji Bunch Viola Robert Carlisle French Horn Cornelius Dufallo Violin Elizabeth Lim Dutton Violin Edison String Group Strings Chris Gross Cello, Amy Kauffman Violin Alexandra Knoll Oboe Lenny Kravitz Bass, Congas, Cowbell, Drums, Finger Snaps, Guitar, Guitar (Bass), Guitar (Electric), Guitars, Hammond B3, Handclapping, Harmonica, Harpsichord, Keyboards, Mellotron, Mixing, Moog Synthesizer, Orchestration, Organ (Hammond), Piano, Piano (Electric), Producer, Soloist, Sound Effects, String Arrangements, Synthesizer, Tambourine, Vocals, Vocals (Background), Wurlitzer Katie Kresek Violin Conway Kuo Violin Kurt Nikkanen Violin Lenny Pickett Saxophone Stewart Rose French Horn Craig Ross Guitar (Acoustic), Guitar (Electric), Handclapping, Mandolin, Orchestration Dov Scheindlin Viola Anoushka Shankar Sitar Antoine Silverman Violin Liuh-Wen Ting Viola

Never let it be said that Lenny Kravitz lives in the past -- he knows that 2008 is all about the resurrection of Led Zeppelin, so he's constructed his eighth album, It Is Time for a Love

Lenny Kravitz - It's time To Love Revolution (2008)

Written by bluesever

Friday, 25 December 2009 11:02 - Last Updated Monday, 18 June 2018 08:24

Revolution, as a virtual tribute to the mighty Zep. Once he dispenses with the neo-title track -- a signature two-chord, fuzz-tone stomp recalling "Are You Gonna Go My Way" -- Kravitz turns his attention to a stack of old Zeppelin LPs, borrowing the close of "When the Levee Breaks" for the coda of "Bring It On," echoing "Babe I'm Gonna Leave You" on "I Love the Rain," recycling the JB groove of "The Crunge" twice (once freshening it up with some Dirty Mind synth on "Will You Marry Me"), and then stitching together the verse of "Ramble On" and the chorus riff of "The Rain Song" for "If You Want It," all before inverting the "No Quarter" riff for the song's furious conclusion. Clever classicist that he is, Kravitz does all this without outright thievery, drawing knowing allusions to sacred texts and then meticulously constructing an album that feels and plays like an LP from the golden age of gatefolds. What his newfound obsession with Jimmy Page's guitar army has done is revitalize his overly familiar aesthetic, giving him another palette of colors to splash across his re-creations of the past. This new coat of paint surely helps It Is Time for a Love Revolution feel fresh, but it also helps that he has written some of his best classic rock pastiches in years, songs powered by big hooks and bigger harmonies. As sonic sculptures, they're damn near irresistible but, as so many Kravitz songs are, they're about almost nothing but the sound. Always one who favors a sledgehammer to a scalpel, he bluntly addresses his dying father in "A Long and Sad Goodbye" and the Iraq War in "Back in Vietnam," never digging deeper than the messages in the titles, while the rest of the record is dominated by rhymes only slightly more complicated than those of "Fly." Then again, insight has never been among the chief reasons to listen to Lenny Kravitz: his knack for shaping sound always has been his main gift. And by the measure of pure sound, It Is Time for a Love Revolution is a glorious feast of retro-rock pleasures -- a feast of empty calories, perhaps, but sometimes fast food is more irresistible than a five-course meal. ---Stephen Thomas Erlewine, AllMusic Review download (mp3 @VBR kbs):

yandex mediafire uloz.to cloud.mail.ru gett

back