Vocalist Brian Poole organized the Tremeloes in the late Fifties. By the time they signed the Decca contract, the group also included Rick West on lead guitar, Alan Blakely on rhythm guitar, Alan Howard on bass and Dave Munden on drums. Poole, who earlier affected a kind of Buddy Holly look (complete with horn-rimmed glasses), decided to change his image when the Tremeloes first few releases fell flat. At the same time, the band started to cover R&B classics. The first of these efforts, "Twist and Shout," reached #4 on the British charts despite having to compete head-to-head with the Beatles' version.

The Tremeloes' next single, "Do You Love Me," went mano a mano with and ultimately
