After Roy Eldridge's lengthy stay at the Three Deuces Club in Chicago, he next set up shop at the Arcadia Ballroom in New York. Louis Armstrong had been the undisputed King of jazz trumpet over the past decade, but by now nobody could touch Little Jazz. He pays homage to his idol but is also doing things that no other trumpet player had ever attempted. These broadcast transcriptions, taken from four nights between August 5th and September 9th, were recorded on acetate discs so there are some rather abrupt beginnings and endings along with the usual surface noise.

On this LP the great swing trumpeter Roy Eldridge is heard leading his ten-piece group at New York's Arcadia Ballroom. These radio broadcasts were somewhat primitively recorded but the excitement of Eldridge's playing shines through. Although this particular band did record eight titles later in the year, most of the music on this set (including "Little Jazz," "Mahogany Hall Stomp," "Shine," "Woodchopper's Ball" and "Lady Be Good") was not recorded by the trumpeter during the era. This album is worth searching for by swing collectors. --Scott Yanow, Rovi
