

Brahms - Piano Concerto No. 2 In B Flat, Op. 83 (Grimaud) (2012)

Wpisany przez bluesever
Środa, 02 Maj 2018 14:44 -

Brahms - Piano Concerto No. 2 In B Flat, Op. 83 (Grimaud) (2012)

Piano Concerto No. 2 In B Flat, Op. 83 (Live At Musikverein, Vienna 2012) 1 1. Allegro non troppo 18:52 2 2. Allegro appassionato 9:25 3 3. Andante - Più adagio 12:44 4 4. Allegretto grazioso - Un poco più presto 9:27

16 Waltzes, Op. 39

5 15. In A flat 1:48

Hélène Grimaud - piano Wiener Philharmoniker Andris Nelsons - conductor

There is no doubt that Hélène Grimaud is a pianist possessed of an unassailable technique and a fearless, risk-taking disposition. Yet, despite her fascination for wolves, she is far from a pack animal; and, despite the scale of Brahms's B flat Piano Concerto, this score requires a soloist very much in touch with his or her inner chamber musician. With the piano part folded into proceedings from the very start, there's an extraordinary process at work of orchestra and pianist defining, anchoring and almost grooming each other, and also acting as a sort of mutual corrective.

Nelsons completely got the point of this balancing act between impulsiveness and formal security. With Grimaud, though, that sort of connection wasn't a given, especially in the elaborate and flexible structure of the first movement. It worked, but like an Internet signal not quite at full strength. She was an amazingly grand, even portentous barnstormer, trills had a steely glint, the ben marcato passages bounced with ferocious articulation and double octaves were awesome. In the quieter areas, though, where the music stands and stares, Brahms's striving for subtleties of muted colour and remote expressiveness, magically realised by the Philharmonia, wasn't entirely up her street and her fortissimo had a consistent volume without fullness that left her with nowhere to go in the climactic peak of the second movement. There was much more rapport in the Andante – how could there not be, with Timothy Walden's eloquent, romantic cello solo setting the scene? – with Grimaud relaxing into some mesmerising and interior playing, and she had completely the measure of the finale's geniality. --- Peter Reed, classicalsource.com

Brahms - Piano Concerto No. 2 In B Flat, Op. 83 (Grimaud) (2012)

Wpisany przez bluesever
Środa, 02 Maj 2018 14:44 -

download (mp3 @320 kbs):

yandex mediafire uloz.to gett

back