For close to five decades, Dolly Parton has been hitting the road, taking her music to the masses. Along the way, she’s released some albums that document the Parton concert experience – most notably 1970’s A Real Live Dolly and the disc that could be my favorite Dolly album of all time, 1994’s Heartsongs: Live From Dollywood. Both of those were recorded in her native East Tennessee home of Sevier County, but her latest live offering takes her a little bit down the road from Sevierville and Locust Ridge – all the way to London, England!

Though the setting might be a little bit different, the reception that Parton gets when she takes the stage is universal. She knows her audience, and the audience knows her. That bond is very apparent on cuts like “Two Doors Down,” “Coat Of Many Colors,” and the early Parton classics “Shattered Image” and “My Tennessee Mountain Home,” which will no doubt please many of Dolly’s fans who have been there since the days of Porter Wagoner and Black Draught!

The disc also contains some of the stories behind some of her biggest hits like “Jolene,” as well as a lively romp through what could very well be my favorite Dolly track of all time, “Here You Come Again.” Also included in the package is a DVD copy of the show that includes a few more songs, and rare behind-the-scenes interviews and footage of what takes place at a Parton show. So, whether you are in your car, or watching in front of the television, you can experience the warmth, humor, and talent of this unique American legend! --- Chuck Dauphin, musicnewsnashville.com
