August, 1969. Almost 500,000 gathered in Bethel, New York to speak with a collective musical voice, forever preserving the spirit of the sixties generation and creating, through performances by some of the best artists of the time, "three days of love and music" that would come to represent their spirit and belief they could change the world into a better place. It was an age of idealism, with a true commitment to their mission as the generation of change, forged in the midst of the Vietnam War and an era of materialism and bigotry they completely rejected. Woodstock became their message, a concert event unique in the history of concert events, never again equaled in its message, spirit or its intensity.

All the excitement and authenticity of original performances from acts like Joe Cocker; the Who; Crosby Stills, Nash and Young; Alvin Lee and Ten Years After; Janis Joplin; Jefferson Airplane; Jimi Hendrix; Lesley West and Mountain; Joan Baez; and Ritchie Havens, to name some of the artists who performed, continues to pack the punch and deliver the message they originally did.
