AC/DC had been in existence for six years and had released as many albums when this rollicking show at Towson State College, near Baltimore, Maryland was transmitted as a live broadcast by local FM radio. The band was in its prime, with vocalist Bon Scott leading the group through what would later be viewed as some of their strongest material, and the Young brothers driving the guitar-boogie riffs at full throttle. The band had just released Highway To Hell, the album that would break the entertaining Aussie band worldwide, and was burning up the rock radio charts with a platter of classics that included Girl's Got Rhythm, Touch Too Much, and the title track. Sadly, four months later, Bon Scott would drink himself to death and the band would be thrown into complete turmoil. The Young brothers and the remaining members, however, would regroup and re-emerge with new singer Brian Johnson in 1980, as well as a new album, Back In Black. AC/DC, as we all know, went on to superstar status, but there are those that say the Bon Scott version will never be surpassed. This concert, originally captured for the King Biscuit Flower Hour, is classic Scott era AC/DC, and one of the few professional live recordings that includes material from Highway To Hell. ---amazon.com
